Lot 726

2 very speculative Aboriginal Australian carved wooden objects, probably late 19th or early 20th century, each similarly carved with shallow longitudinal grooves in the so-called style as seen on a multitude of familiar boomerangs and throwing sticks, both objects have flattened swollen heads with integral rounded handles, and measure 54.5cms and 52cms respectively, the longest has a broader head with a significant break to one side which has been roughly glued back in place. Both have excellent age patina overall, and it therefore seems unlikely that their handles have been shortened. We have consulted the usual sources (Webster, Oldman, assorted ethnographic guides and publications etc.) to help with identification but have drawn a blank. It remains possible that these items were used as canoe paddles in the manner shown in T. Medland's engraving of 'Natives of Botany Bay' from R. Cleverley's drawing d.1789, although neither shows signs of use in water.
